

Down Hawley Way

Banker Mangan Revives a Memory of the Days When "Chet" Potter Was Conductor of the "Pioneer," and Lackawanna County's Controller Was a Happy Newsboy—Erie Employees to be Uniformed—Deaths—Personals, Etc.

THANKSGIVING, like Christmas, comes but once a year, but when it does come it is apt to disarrange things.

Incidentally banker Mangan remarked the other day, when referring to some matter of local nature that pointed to the yesterday that it occurred "when Charley Savage peddled the Daily Avalanche in Hawley."

It isn't "Charley" Savage any more. For many years it was Mr. C. P. Cavage, and for a long time it has been County Controller Charles P. Savage, of Lackawanna, whose home is on Cherry street in the "No. 6" section of Dunmore.

That was away back in 1876, the year when everybody went to Philadelphia to attend the big Centennial Exhibition, when the Democrats were running Samuel J. Tilden for President, and the newspaper business was a different proposition from the publicity line of the twentieth century as it is pursued to-day.

On the night of election everybody was excited. The returns indicated the election of Tilden, and Coon set the heading for the article claiming the election of the "Sage of Grammercy Park," New York.

The next day the outlook was not so rosy. There was an element of doubt in the political air, but there seemed warrant for "claiming everything," and again Coon set the election news heading.

The "Avalanche" was a 4-page paper, six columns to the page. It went to Hawley on the old "Pioneer," leaving No. 6, Dunmore, between 8 and 9 o'clock. It took a little over 2 hours to make the run.

Oh, the fate of the Avalanche! Certainly! One night shortly after the election, when it was quite sure that "We" hadn't "got 'em," an alarm of fire sounded when everybody was out of the office getting supper.

Certain Erie Employees To Be Uniformed. The writer was informed on good authority that all men employed by the Erie Railroad Company who receive more than $1.25 a day are to dress in Erie uniforms.

A Bit of Reminiscence Regarding the Hawley Depot. The Erie's depot at West Hawley since its coating of cement has thoroughly dried, looks fine, and it will look finer when the painters have got through with the wood work according to their ideas of how it should look.
